livief Reviews of Important and Interest

New Publications. Mrs. Kate Upson Clark writes graceful and charming stories, and a volume of them for which the discerning reader will not fall to thank her is published under the title of "White Butterflies" by J. F. Taylor & Co. Founded in a realism which is happily not obruded, they are generous enough to include events; and they are good stories for the good reason that they are regulated by wisdom and expressed with art. It must be that there are plenty of people of more impressive reputation who are less interesting than the little community of French-Canadian charcoal burners included here, who kept the kilns hot and developed a great smoke and a very pathetic little romance on the top of a Vermont mountain. Smoke City was an unofficial name, no doubt, a gratuity flung of by a benevolent neighborhood opulent n humor, and not set down in the maps or recognized by the Post Office. We do not know that there was ever a city of charcoal burners, though it is very likely that there were a great many of that calling in Birmingham before ready-made coal was discovered down under the roots of the trees. Smoke City had no city hall, no Mayor, and no police force, and though it did have a rather notable fire department, which burned down the surrounding forest with much professional ardor, there was no other proud urban feature subject to its boastful claim. It was unpretentious, new and crude a place of unpainted cabins and unfenced dooryards, the men so besmoked that they looked like blackamoors, the children neglected and vociferous, stumps everywhere. But Mrs. Clark knew her way in Smoke City, and so, while making no concealment of these matters, she was at no loss to conduct us to the Roney library, which hung on a shelf in old Adolph Roney's best room-namely, his kitchen-and was certainly a worthy and splendid manifestation, and to the Beaublen flower garden, a place of beauty that would have attracted attention anywhere and that was no less than wonderful in its actual surroundings.

Our belief is that the reader would have liked to be company for Pierrette Beaubien in her flower garden. It is not said in so many words in the story that she was beautiful and charming, but one knows very well that she must have been. She was half a head taller than her father, and she was proud and inclined to a certain severity of opinion in sentimental matters up to the ime when André Reboul was taken in by the Beaubiens as a boarder. Old Adolph Roney set store by learning: he had his library as proof that he did; but it is not apparent at all that Pierrette Beaubien's chances for happiness in Smoke City were modified by the circumstance that she could not read or write. Any candid person will admit that a tall girl in a flower garden is not necessarily called upon to be a scholar in order to be interesting.

If she has earnest and poetical emotions she is suited to be quite interesting enough, as everybody will find who reads this story. and as André Reboul very soon found when he came into the Beaublen household as a boarder. Perhaps, though she was not possessed of those accomplishments of the intellect which distinguished Adolph Roney, she had heard of the aphorism which warns us not to leap at conclusions; if she had, it is a pity that she could not have recalled it at the point where, in her experience, it was the most necessary. That is what the story very effectively sets before us. The story which gives the book its title is the atory of a burglar. That burglary should be complicated with white butterflies is curious, and the curious thing, of course, is the thing that we would particularly like to find out about, and this, plainly, Mrs. Clark very well knew. One reading the story will learn what the white butterflies had to do with the burglary, and will also learn what a good story it is.

It would be a good story if it involved the burglary alone: it is doubly a good story with the white butterflies included Almost needless to point out, a better story would need a still further application of the multiplica-tion table. "Raldy," another story in the book, is a story of the Wisconsin iur Raldy is a strapping heroine who dispenses readily with a weak hero after she has given him a fair trial. In "Cupidand Minerva" we penetrate a secrecy surrounding the personality of the most distinguished literary critic in New York, the process being interesting and the result remarkable. "Direxia" is an Arkansas story, "Ye Christmas Witch" is a New England story of the last century and there are thirteen stories altogether, affording varieties of local color and of dialect. A clever and agreeable book.

Four parts of "Chefs D'Œuvre of the Exposition Universelle," a handsome work which is to contain twenty-five parts altogether, come to us from George Barrie & Son. Philadelphia We believe that the benevolent will overlook the title. The exhibition in Paris is concluded, but here is a considerable part of the splendid picture gallery. These numbers are devoted to the French pictures which were shown. Here is Lady Godiva coming down the street When she originally came down there was a penalty for looking at her, but now everybody is invited to behold her beauty and her trouble A spick and span Bouguereau picture exposes Cupid to the concentrated admiration of five girls. The doughty little fellow stands it well, showing hardly any emotion; his pose is collected, his hair is nicely curled and he plays prettily with one wing. These girls who are "fixing" Cupid, as Mr. Henry James would say, are all rather slender; but anybody desiring to look at a massive girl will find one combing her hair on page 4

If the arms of this French Lorelei were subdivided and distributed among half a dozen girls they would be fairly well supplied. Of course, Danae is here, regarding gratefully the shower of gold, and, of course, we have the "Sleeping Lady," and the "Stoutest Lady in the Harem," and all the others of that ample kind. In the second number is a French conception of Washington leaving Whitehall for Paulus Hook. He has got Frenchmen to row the boat, and we suspect that he is trying to be French himself; at any rate, he is very different from the conventional portraits and statues of him. At the same time, nobody ill say that he is not an impressive and good Washington. The covers of the several numbers are brightly and handsomely decorated. The pictures are in great variety and are variously and excellently reproduced.

The American Lyceum entertainers are. so Major Pond says, "more than a popular match for the London music hall artists or the Parisian chansonists." The Major ought to know. He is the acknowledged commander-in-chief of that great body of irregulars, the Lyceum Sharp Shooters, and in a ortly and well illustrated volume, entitled "Eccentricities of Genius" (Dillingham), he gives a mass of pleasantly reminiscent inrmation about the many heroes and heroines of the platform who have charged the public under his direction. They are for the most part an interesting lot, ranging from the bearers of names of such dignity and imortance as Wendell Phillips, Spurgeon or Mark Twain all the way down to the absurd

Mr. Hubbard of East Aurora. This Mr. Hubbard seems to be a person in whom a modest diffidence is inconspicuous. We find the Major, on page 368, somewhat ruelly quoting him as having written: get down to business here and I cut off all stractions. I can make a name equal to ohn Ruskin's or Thomas Carlyle's. 1 can of, but I must keep out of sight in order succeed. To merely talk is not to succeed, and the public is only a devil that takes a man to the top of the mountain and then easts him on the stones beneath. . . To merely talk" seems recrettable in more
